July Spotlight - Pretrial Services

LARRP along with many community partners have been at the forefront of advocating for a robust pre-trial service system in LA County for many years, and we are happy to lend our voice to this issue.

The recent Vera report sheds light on the fact that we are still seeing people die in the county jail while we wait for coordinated pretrial services programs that will make significant improvements in the criminal justice system here in Los Angeles County. The report points out that three years after adopting the “care first, jails last” vision that created a transformative framework that has the potential to eradicate unnecessary detention before trial we are still waiting. In fact, it is clear by reading the report that we have stalled in our progress and are languishing in unnecessary jail costs, gaps in the service delivery system, continued loss of life in the county jail and defendants being robbed of their liberty. In addition, the report makes clear recommendations that the county should be taking right now to move the process forward.

I have written an op-ed that outlines the current situation that should be released soon.

Investing in Supportive Pretrial Services: How to Build a “Care First” Workforce in Los Angeles County

Vera Institute of Justice, June 2023

Publication Highlights

- Local providers across the spectrum of services and service planning areas are experiencing staffing shortages resulting from the COVID-19 pandemic and competition with Los Angeles County.
- Capacity-building support is needed to strengthen community-based service providers, as are changes to contracting, billing, and reporting procedures.
- To expand capacity, Los Angeles County should, among other things, implement pretrial services by increasing budgetary allocations for community-based service providers and...

LARRP July Policy Update

State Legislative Update
California is facing a budget deficit of more than 30 billion dollars, leading to many new bills being pulled from the legislative calendar.

$80 million for mental health treatment county jails.
The majority of this money will support health services for incarcerated individuals through increased funding for Integrated Correctional Health Services (ICHS) (Budget Fact Sheet, Ellis Sheriff). The rest of this funding will go towards moving incarcerated individuals with serious mental health conditions into inpatient mental health facilities as opposed to traditional carceral facilities (Board of Supervisors Budget Deliberations Meeting 6/26, Ellis Sheriff).

Establishing the Office of Constitutional Policing (OCP) for increased accountability and investigations into gang presences within the sheriff's department. On the flip side of a few of these promising budget elements, some organizations argue that money could be better spent. For example, $187 million of the CFCI funds...
The LA County Board of Supervisors voted to dedicate 10% of the County's locally generated unrestricted revenues every year to community investments and alternatives to incarceration by June of 2024, which became the CFCI (Care First and Community Investment) budget. This budget includes a variety of positive reforms, along with shortcomings, for the justice-involved community and criminal legal system. Some highlights of the proposed budget include:

- $692 million for the emergency response to the homelessness crisis in LA. This money would fund a 26-person staffing expansion within the CEO’s Homelessness Initiative, service expansions including mental health outreach, and encampment resolution efforts including housing programs (2023-2024 Recommended Budget Press Release, Board of Supervisors Budget Deliberations Meeting 6/26).

- $288 million for Care First and Community Investment (CFCI) to rectify racism in the criminal legal system. The Board of Supervisors voted to dedicate 10% of the county’s locally generated unrestricted revenues every year to community investments and alternatives to incarceration by June of 2024, which became the CFCI fund (also known as Measure J) (Budget Fact Sheet).

An issue LARRP has been pushing for for many years, this year’s budget also did not include allocations to fund the additional beds needed to close Men’s Central Jail, which was supposed to close in March of this year, while devoting over $100 million to renovate and re-open the Los Padrinos juvenile facility (LA Times Editorial Board, Ellis Sheriff).

Major overhaul in the county Probation Department also influences the Board’s agenda. The Board just fired the 9th probation department head in 20 years and passed three motions to improve juvenile justice (Ellis Probation). These three motions are:

1. Reduce the number of teenagers in the Probation Department (Ellis Probation).
2. Find suitable housing for juveniles released from Division of Juvenile Justice facilities (Ellis Probation).
3. Further develop the Department of Youth Development, which could replace the Parole Department in the future (Ellis Probation).

The county will likely incur costs with these changes to juvenile justice, particularly in light of the state recently closing all youth prisons, transferring more responsibility for juvenile justice to counties (Rinker). LA county is also reckoning with videos smuggled out of Men’s Central Jail showing violence unaddressed by guards and appalling conditions inside county jails. In the Board budgetary review meeting, moments of silence were had for individuals recently killed within LA county carceral facilities (Ellis Sheriff). Board members recognized unacceptable conditions within county facilities, and justice advocates can find both hope for progress and concern for inadequate action within the adopted budget.
LARRP's representatives shared their profound insights into the challenges and triumphs that marked the past three years of the LEADERS Training Academy. Through personal anecdotes and powerful storytelling, LARRP's presentation underscored the invaluable contributions of all of the Alumni in the LEADERS Training Academy, illuminating the transformative journey they embarked on and the positive outcomes achieved, all while in reentry.

LARRP would like to thank the whole team at CCJBH for their willingness to partner with LARRP in order to make systemic changes together, including having the lived Experience voice at the table.

LA County Fair Chance Ordinance - Second Listening Session and Service Provider Feedback

Listening Session: Thursday, 7/6/23, 10 - 11:30 am

A chance for everyone to provide feedback on an updated draft that incorporates some of the feedback from the first session.

As you all know, LA County is in the process of drafting a Fair Chance ordinance to provide additional protections around employment searches. LA County is interested in gathering input from service providers. If you aren't able to make the listening sessions, but want to provide feedback, please feel to send me any feedback you have and they will consolidate and pass along!

Fights, beatings and a birth: Videos smuggled out of L.A. jails reveal violence, neglect

LA Times, By Keri Blakinger, June 24, 2023

The brutal 20-minute clip is one of a few dozen graphic videos saved to a thumb drive picked out of the trash by one inmate, and later secreted out of the jail by another. Several of the clips recently reviewed by The Times show stabbings and fist fights. One shows an inmate trying to kill himself, and another shows several jailers punching a man in the head as they try to subdue him. Still another shows a woman giving birth in the middle of a hallway, where her newborn falls out onto the jail floor in a puddle of blood.

Sheriff’s Department gets $4 billion amid ‘unconscionable’ conditions in L.A. jails
“This budget acknowledges that there are serious problems with sheriff violence and jail conditions,” said Ivette Alé-Ferlito, executive director of La Defensa. “But instead of investing in the care and freedom of the survivors, you’re throwing more money at the very departments that are committing these atrocities. This is lipstick on a pig.”

As she spoke, advocates in the crowd held signs with tombstones on them — representing the 24 people who have died in county custody since the start of the year — about one per week.

5 takeaways of the California budget deal

Gov. Gavin Newsom and California lawmakers agreed to a $310.8-billion budget deal that will include an expansion of Medi-Cal coverage and transforming parts of San Quentin State Prison into a rehabilitation center.

County reshapes justice system for women battling mental health issues

Los Angeles County, Calif. is reshaping its justice system with its Guiding Re-Entry of Women (GROW) program, which diverts women with mental health and substance use issues from incarceration, instead providing them with support services.
LA Times, By Brian Kaneda, June 22, 2023

By seizing the chance to close more California prisons, we can forge a transformative path that not only tackles the history of harmful prison expansion but also directs resources toward meeting the long-neglected needs of many communities.

How LA County’s Zero-Bail Rules Can Help Others Like Me

The APPEAL, by Angel Lopez, Jun 28, 2023

I was arrested during the pandemic. In normal circumstances, I likely would have spent months in jail only to be thrown back into the streets, having lost what few belongings I had and any progress I had made to get myself in a better place. Instead, the bail schedule freed me. This new normal allowed me to receive the drug treatment I needed and the additional resources and programs I would not have known about otherwise. I used every opportunity from EBS to get my life together, having learned this freedom could be hard to come by.

Column: What happened to criminal justice reform?

La Times, By Nicholas Goldberg, June 5, 2023

It seems like only yesterday that criminal justice reform was in vogue. Progressives were being elected as prosecutors. Laws were passed to relieve prison overcrowding and divert offenders from the system who needed treatment, not jail time.

This series of climate hazards has made it evident that the effects of climate change will continue to intensify, have the greatest impact on already vulnerable populations, and, most critically, the California carceral system is not prepared to respond to climate hazards in or near prisons.
